UK Outlook for Thursday 7 Oct 2021 to Saturday 16 Oct 2021:

Later next week, unsettled conditions are expected to be focused across the north and northwest with cloud and rain which may be heavy and persistent at times accompanied by some strong winds, particularly in coastal locations. Further southeast, drier and more settled conditions look more likely. Whilst some sunny spells are expected, light winds will allow for some patchy fog to develop overnight which may locally be slow to clear. Temperatures are expected to be above average through this period. Into the following week, this northwest-southeast regime is generally likely to persist. However, there is an increasing likelihood of some occasional rain affecting areas further southeast with temperatures also returning to nearer average at times.
